The New York Bustle-Wearers

[From the Philadelphia North American] . The evil habit of bustle-wearing among omen has agitated New York to such an extent that an amateur census of those addicted to the crare and those who are not has been taken. The census-takers were reporters, who spotted en in various parts of the city until they had counted 100 whom they imagined either wore a bustle or were without the artificial dress-supporter. The average man cannot tell whether a woman wears a bustle or not when he passes her on the street, but the New York reporter is doubtless not an average man, and is able to determine exactly in his mind this important problem at a glance. The census shows that bustle-wearing is almost uni-

A TRANSFORMED TENEMENT. Happiness, Industry and Harmony Where

The big double tenement building, 36 and 18 Cherry street, was one of the foulest in the city nine years ago, and sheltered a very hard-looking lot of people.

Several wealthy citizens happened to visit it one day, however, and were shocked by the filth and squalor. They bought the building and enlisted the aid and sympathy of philanthropic ladies of their acquaintance to bring about a radical reform. The result was a transformation as brilliant as that which takes place in a Christmas pantomime. Cleanliness rose phomiz.like, from the ashes

Mrs. Edward Miles, Miss O. H. Dow and Mrs. A. P. Wheeler sacrificed personal comfort and convenience to the cause of humanity, and supervised the building and its 400 tenants in the order named.

Mrs. A. P. Wheeler has had charge for the past two years.

Not ratisfied with seeing that order and

Not satisfied with seeing that order and clesnliness prevailed throughout the vast tenement, she formed a sewing and singing class of thirty of the brightest little girls. They reflect credit on their instructor.

Wednesday she rewarded her little charges by enacting the role of Kris Kringle for their benefit.

A beautiful Christmas tree was placed in the large assembly room and decked in holiday attire. Thisel, toys and candles glittered and shinmered among the green branches in a way to delight the heart of each little chick and child.

Then the children were called in. Wide-the children were called in. Wide-eyed with expectancy and glowing with sutleipated pleasure they trooped in. After much fidgeting all were scated.

The thirty little girls then sang in chorus and singly. They covered themselves with glory. Miss Emma Blunt volunteered to act as orchesters, and played the plane accom-

Wee Lizzle and Katle Boyle chanted a couple of jingling Celestial dirges anent the hastine Chines and his pigtail. Their comical readiation created a cyclone of merriment among their auditors.

After an entertaining menu of accig and decimation had been acreed up by the little tote, books, dolls, sleds, tops and other presents and choice candies ad libitum were presents and choice candies ad libitum were presented to each child in the building.

Their eyes sparkled with consuming delight as their little hands clutched Banta Claus's gifts existatically to their breasts.

They were, indeed, a happy lot as they sourried away.

Young America wrinkled his brows, and presently replied unconcernedly: "There are so many things I want to remember and can't remember that I don't think I shall trouble myself to try to remember things I don't want to remember." The Building Trades Section meets to-night.

The Arbitration Committee of the Central Laker Union was engaged at 145 Eighth street until late last night, investigating the trouble between Manager Hangen, of Poole's Theatre, and the Hebrew Actors' and Jewish Chorus Union.

It is said that the Ale and Forter Brewers' As-sociation proposes to take some decided action against the Union workmen who are pushing the Stevenson bo-cott.

Hereinson bo-cott.

Henewed efforts will be made by the labor unions to obtain the passage of a bill by the next Legislature providing for the appointment of eight female factory inspectors. They claim that such inspectors are very much needed, and it is said that Gov. Hill will sign the bill if it is passed by the Legislature.

passed by the Legislature.

A large number of the union brewerymen who were looked out last spring are still without permatent employment, and the labor unions are not doing anything substantial for their support. Tickets are out for a ball for the benefit of the looked-out men and their families, to be held Jan. 19, in Clarendon Hall. All union men who are able to do so may contribute by purchasing a ticket.

NO QUARTER GIVEN OR TAKEN BY JER-SEY'S COMBATANTS.

McPherson and Abbett Are Clinched in the Middle of the Arena, While Winfield and Blodgett Make Feints on the Outer Edge-First Blood Will Flow at Trenton,

There is a game of political "Rugby" in progress over in Jersey. The ball in use is the seat in the United States Senate which John R. McPherson has learned to love so

John leads a team of fighters and, has the advantage of possession, but Leon Abbett's men are hustling, kicking and stampeding. and although the dust raised clouds matters a little, it looks very much as if some one is going to get hurt before one side or the other gets the ball in a safe place.

It will be pull and tug, and kick and bite entil after Jan. 8. On that momentous day the dust will fly faster for awhile, and then in a day or two somebody will win. Senator McPherson is making the bardest fight of his life to keep his seat for six years longer, and ex-Gov. Abbett is hustling as he never hustled before in his effort to pull it from

At present it is impossible to say who has the lead. Abbett has gained considerable At present it is impossible to say who has the lead. Abbett has gained considerable ground during the pest lew weeks and his stock seems to continue on the rise, but a change of aspect may be a tended by depreciation. The ex-Governor holds the better part of the Northern Assemblymen. Five of the Hudson men are his, and the other four are said to be in the pocket of District-Attorney Charles H. Winnield, who may thus possess the power to control the end.

The Democratic majority in the Legislature on joint bellot is only four. If the special election ordered in the Tenth Hudson District for Jan. 8, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Assemblyman Frank Short, results in the return of snother Democrat, the majority will be five, and if not will be reduced to three, which two votes might change.

duced to three, which two votes might change.

Abbett's griends are working hard in the Tenth, and it is likely that his candidate will win, and just in time to qualify and settle down to business. Senstor McPherson is unpopular in Hudson. He was elected from that county in 1833, but has since changed his residence to Monmouth and again to Bornerset, so that he is no longer rated as a Hudson Benator Rufus Bladgett who defeated Abbett

Senator Rufus Bladgett who defeated Abbett and Sewell two years ago, is also from Moumouth. It is said that he can do what he pleases with the South Jersey vote. This is interesting for Mr. Abbett.

The preliminary bout will be the election of the Speaker of the House. There the real strength of each party will be shown. Mr. Abbett's man is Corporation Attorney R. S. Hudspeth, who represents the Sixth Hudson District, as he did in 1886. In that year he led the Abbett forces and received the cancus nomination for Speaker. But the same Democratic treachery which defeated Abbett piaced Baird of Warren in the Speaker's chair, Mr. Hudspeth naturally assumes cr's chair. Mr. Hudspeth naturally assumes his old leadership. He is a bright young lawyer of unusual ability and as sharp as a Jerasyman well can be. He is confident of success and his confidence seems to be well based.

Senator McPherson wants either McDermitt, of Essex, or Farrell, of the Eighth Hudson District, which lies opposite Newark. It is said that these two have threatened to boit the caucus if Hudspeth is named. Of course, the fight for the Chair is parallel with that for the Senatorship, and only time will divide the rame of the victor.

that for the Senatorship, and only time will divulge the name of the victor.

District Attorney Winfield may have a great deal to say and do in consequence of those four votes of his, and, above all, there is the possibility of the victory of a dark horse, just as it was in 1886. Blodgett was unheard of until within a few days of the finish of that memorable fight, and when he was elected the query "Who is Blodgett?" became general throughout the State.

Still the real and only fight is between McPherson and Abbett. The latter has declared his intention of fighting to the death and also of retiring from political life if he meets a second defeat. Personally he seems certain of victory. He is Hudson's idol, a fact plainly and painfully evinced at the banquet given to Sheriff Davis in Jersey City last week.

McPherson and Abbett were both there.

McPherson and Abbett were both there

McPherson and Abbett were both there.
The former's toast was "The President." and the latter's, 'New Jersey." McPherson spoke first and stole Abbett's thunder by barely mentioning Grover Cleveland and devoting himself to the State.
His address was made amid a murmur of conversation and the clatter of dishes, and ended in meager appliance. When Mr. Ab.

ended in meagre applause. When Mr ended in meagre applause. When Mr. Abbett was introduced he remarked that as Mr.

McPherson had answered for New Jersey he would attend to Mr. Cleveland. He then spoke highly and at length of the President, wildly applauded all the while, and received an ovstion as he finished. A short time afterwards Mr. McPherson silently sought his hat and left the hall without a farewell.
After all, the disposition of the thirty-one Democrats and twenty-eight Republicans in the Assembly and the eleven Democrats and ten Republicans in the Senate will not be known until they gather at Trenton. Prophets of the result are in danger of precipitation into back seats and only those who conjecture are on the safe side. It is a hot fight and a queer fight, but a fight to the finish.

A HORSE PARBOILED IN PARK ROW.

He Fell Into a Yawning Treuch Made by the New York Steam Company.

A great cloud of steam, with two men and struggling street-car horse in a deep hole, furnished a thrilling scene in Park Row, unmediately in front of the Potter Building, very early this morning. The twelve-inch main of the New York

Steam Company runs along Park Row fourteen feet beneath the railroad track. Yesterday a break_occurred in the pipe and the steam escaped through the earth and pave-ment. The Steam Company was notified and two men were sent to repair the main. They dug their way down to the pipe while a man stood at the hole to warn street.

while a man stood at the hole to warn street-car drivers to unhitch the horses and push the cars over the opening, which was about twelve feet square on the surface.

Travel was greatly delayed, but nothing occurred until after midnight, when William Kelly, driver of a Bisecker street car, at-tempted to get over the hole without un-hitching his horses, reining the animals so as to bring them on the pavement signgaids the opening. The horse nearest the hole planted his shoe on the rail, slipped and rolled over into the excavation, enveloped in a cloud of hasing steam.

O'Brien and Mullin were still at work in O'Brien and Mullin were still at work in the hole trying to reach the leak, and they were warned just in the nick of time to escape being crushed to death.

The horse, burned by the hot vapor and entangled in the harness so that it was sus-pended from its mate, kicked and struggled violently. It required twenty minutes of the very hardest of work to extricate the animal. Its hair and skin were burned off, and it pre-sented a shocking sight.

The hole was afterwards covered with long, thick planks, and a man ren a na there to warn drivers of heavily leaded trucks to turn out and avoid the place.

and Doyers street, to a large crowd a few afternoons ago.

In front of him stood a tray of red boxes in which were wrapped little pieces of greasy white soap wrapped up in a white circular. Two "cappers" stood near.

The young man would bick up a box, open it and then he appeared to tnek a two-dollar bill away in it as he closed the lid. Then he would throw the box in among the others, sir them up, and selecting three would offer them for sale in the manner quoted above.

If there were no buyers he would hand one of the boxes to a copper, who would open it, and out would tumble the bill.

and out would tumble the bill.

This would urge some greenhorn to invest, and at the next opportunity he would do so, unless the next batch really did contain money. In case it did, a capper was ready to snap it up, and the greenhorn got the next chance to be skinned. In this way the capper and his two pals make quite a large salary every day.

An Easy Way Found to Beat the Drop-s

Penny-in-the-Slot Machine. A way has been found to " beat" the drops-penny-in-the-slot machine. A young man who has one of the electric machines in his store has puzzled over the thing for some time and has at last succeeded in solving the problem.

The way he beats the machine is very simple. He has a penny with a hole bored near the edge. Through this a piece of fine wire is run and fastened.

The young man drops the cent in the slot and lets it down through the cylinder until the current is started.

As soon as he gets his "shock" he pulls the cent up and repeats the performance.

THE ROOSTER BOSSES THE CAGE.

He Vanquished the Three Foxes and Now All Form a Happy Family. A blissfully happy though strangely assorted family may be seen in a cage at the store of a well-known merchant on Mercer street not many numbers above the intersec tion of Grand street.

When the cage was received at the store a week or two ago it contained three foxes, all alive and much more lively than when a few months previously they were dug from out their mother's burrow. Two of them are of the "silvered" variety and exceedingly rare.

The third is a common every-day red for, but possessed of much beauty and more slyness. All three were captured when quite young in the far Northwe-t, and shipped by a St. Paul firm to this city.

They arrived in good condition, but very hungry. Their owner fed them with varied edibles for rome little time before it occurred to him that animals of the same breed and presumably of the same appetite were in days gone by accustomed to regale themselves with choice bits from his grandmother's chicken-coops.

These foxes had probably never tasted a piece of poultry in their lives, and it was decided to sacrifice a chick or two in order that they might with the rest of the world celebrate the holidays. Bo a live rooster of uncertain age was purchased and introduced to

He survived the introduction two minutes and twenty-three seconds. Half an hour af-terwards a few feathers were all that remained of the once sprightly chick. Other roosters followed the fate of the first, and the three foxes grew fat, sleek and wondrous happy despite their confinement. But a few days ago—just before Xmas—those three blood ago—just before Xmas—those three blood letters were given a surprise.

A well-plumed, large-combed rooster, of the White Leghorn variety, batched from a last Spring's egg, was flung into the cage. The bird with a flap landed upon its feet. His next movement was to extend his neck and give utterance to a well-bred rooster's regulation war cry. The foxes smiled at one another, cocked their eyes at their expected supper and cautiously approached their prey.

The rooster noticed the movement and took immediate umbrage—also something else, for with a scream of anger he dashed his besk at the red fox and clipped a lock of hair from off Sir Reynard's head. That Leghorn cock then proceeded to give those foxes a lesson in the art of war.

He pecked with beak and struck with spur, first at one and then at another, until at length it seemed as though the intended diners were to be the dinner. But at length the lattle ceased. The rooster was the victor the lattle ceased. The rooster was the victor and the foxes were utterly subdued.

That night the rooster roosted upon the war-scarred head of the red fox, and for two days after the bird bossed the cage and all that therein was. On the third day the owner of the beasts, fearing that the loss of eyes might result from birdie's kisses, released the cock from the cage and in a coop sent him to a place on Fourth street, where at present ne is confined.

The story becoming known to some showmen, offers were made to the firm for the foxes and the rooster, and it may be that the public will have a chance to see for themselves before long the cock's supremacy.
